

INSTITUTIONAL PEDOPHILIA

A failed society is one where compulsive preoccupation with sexuality is the norm, and it's related to the disintegration of a sense of mutual respect for modesty as a virtue in the expression of human affairs. We live in a violent, vulgar world in need of refinement obtained through social institutions that are failing in that function. This new standard of a lack of respect for privacy of one's mind and body has manifested itself in governmental policies with methods that utilize voyeuristic, invasive naked body scanners, and the touching of children's "private parts" are evidence of the dark side of human nature institutionalized as normal procedure.

The normal are outwardly modest in their sexual conduct while in the privacy of a relationship, and educate children to be likewise by teaching an awareness of sexual predators that are abnormal. But, efforts at protecting small children from larger, disturbed adults have encountered those same reprehensible behaviors institutionalized in surveillance practices which have become the norm in the police ranks. They are perverse policies giving life to a state of "Official Peeping Toms" with a license to "cross the line" of any notions of decent conduct.

It's unconscionable when public servants spy on the privacy of the citizenry while harassing them in the name of safety. But servants spying on the private lives of their employers is an old practice. Yet to pat down and search the genitals of children as potential carriers of terroristic devices, is evidence of an unleashed dark-side in governance that rules through humiliation and fear, the basis of "enhanced techniques" employed by inquisitors of state that experienced by children are perverse at worst and torture at best. If ethical people object – they are unethically targeted for harassments through invasive interrogations.

Children, unlike confused, puerile adults, understand what torture is and what a pervert is. Good people have properly educated children as to the dangers of strangers trying to play with them inappropriately. What comes from a traumatizing experience perpetrated on children by TSA agents conducting themselves like immature bullies? Inappropriate government practices to achieve public safety are laid bare when they are called out by children crying "stranger danger," or whimpering in terror from a fearful, giant ogre towering above while molesting them. From the view point of children trained to guard their safety – they and their inappropriate methods are pedophiles to run away from!

The rational and the ethical can imagine a small child with a therapist finding out exactly where they were "groped" by the criminality of state pedophiles; but pedophiles and perversities of state – licensed criminality? Clearly government has stretched the bounds of credulity on a whole range of issues. But will this incredulous, scandalous abuse have future ramifications for government from a newly grown generation seeking accountability – even revenge? But how can government be accountable with bureaucratic agendas that write the manual of operations, and then write rules which thwart investigating any “alleged” misconduct? Rules meant to aid society, but twisted to serve an agency’s questionable purpose, have been peeled away from effective oversight and control by political and civil institutions. Agencies that were instruments of state, have become constituency groups demanding a life of their own – a life contrary to democratic oversight from civil society which is forced to support a regulatory police state with a life of its own.

Governmental agents could claim they were ignorant or just following orders – but ignorance of law, what is right and wrong, or just “going along” have been ruled invalid excuses for participating in a crime. Given that these perverse assaults on the public are well documented by the media, government agents can no longer feign ignorance – they are complicit in a sexual crime. It is because of this hypocrisy found in a whole host of government policies and practices not reflective of the will of civil society, is the basis of a justifiable contempt – the basis of revolutions that topple governments. Federal agents who know better, but have become embroiled in these perversities – now is the chance to “step forward” and confess their knowledge of it so they can qualify for amnesty before the system is toppled by the indignant who will demand real accountability. Given the lack of respect for privacy of one’s mind and body embodied in governmental practices unleashing the dark side of human nature, those in law enforcement that have been complicit in these perverse assaults on the public, like criminals – they need to be placed in confinement.
